

Editorial

The editorial staff of the journal “Philologica Jassyensia” is happy to announce that, starting with issue 1/2015, the journal has been ISI indexed: Thomson Reuters – Emerging Sources Citation Index (ESCI). This outstanding classification in the field of international scientometry reflects the appreciation of the high quality norms which our journal has promoted along the 10 years of uninterrupted publication. We have every intention of improving the quality of our journal by publishing studies and articles relevant for the present stage of research in Romanian and international philology.

One of the important aspects we shall have in view will be to increase the number of articles and reviews in foreign languages (English, French, Italian, German, Spanish) in order to facilitate the access to the content of the journal of the readers who do not know Romanian but who are interested in the results of Romanian philological research. Besides focusing on research topics relevant for Romanian philology and in order to consolidate academic intercultural dialogue, we shall encourage the publishing of the results of European philology in its broader sense. For the same reason, that of a better reception in Romania of current tendencies in international philological research, we shall offer generous publishing space to academic reviews of books published abroad that make an important contribution to philology.
